Significance of the Academic Costume

The significance of the academic costume is determined especially by the sleeves and hoods.

Doctors wear the round bell sleeve; the gown is faced down the front and barred on the sleeves with black velvet or color indicating the degree; the doctor’s hood is large. The doctor may choose to wear the gold tassel on the cap.

Masters wear the long, closed sleeve, with a slit near the upper part of the arm; the master’s hood is of more moderate size.

Bachelors wear the long or pointed sleeve. The color of the tassel indicates whether the degree is in the field of arts (white), fine arts (brown), music (pink), or science (golden yellow).

HONORARY DOCTORAL DEGREE

Jehan Sadat

It is more than fitting that Brigham Young University honor a lady who values education so highly that she returned to school after she had raised her four children not only to complete a bachelor's degree—graduating at the top of her class, incidentally—but also to earn her master's and doctorate degrees. Her timing underscores the fact that her first line of commitment is to her family, because she delayed her education until she could leave her children. But it also highlights her determination to educate herself, a characteristic that she has instilled in her own children and tries to instill in countless others to this day. This university, whose motto is "The Glory of God Is Intelligence," today celebrates her lifelong thirst for knowledge and her determined, public campaigning to bring the opportunity for education and a better life to millions of the earth's poor and disadvantaged.

Madame Sadat's first impressions of life, of course, came to her in her home. Born to an Egyptian father, who was Muslim, and to a British mother, who was Christian, she learned that her parents embodied the highest and most deeply personal sense of what it means to understand and appreciate differences in another person. And although she was raised as a Muslim, the dimension of her home life that taught her patient understanding would prepare her to play a visibly supportive role when her husband, the late President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, decided to take the unforgettable and irreversible steps toward forging a peace with Israel, a country that had been the implacable enemy of Egypt in five wars. It was not without meaning for Madame Sadat that her mother would join her father and the four children when they fasted during the Islamic month of Ramadan. It was an act of supportive understanding, a trait that Madame Sadat has tried to instill in her children and grandchildren.

Madame Sadat met her husband on her fifteenth birthday and married him when she was sixteen. When she first met him, he had just served a thirty-month prison term for resisting the continuing presence of British troops in Egypt, and he had no real prospects for employment. But steadfastly she supported him, not realizing that events would eventually catapult her into the dual roles of the first lady of her country and one of the first ladies of the world. The ideals that her parents had taught her in their home now rose in her as springs of compassion and understanding that she would pour onto her people as long as she was in a position to do so, and beyond.

The wellspring for her success in helping others grew out of her childhood home. And she transported these traits to her own family, which stands as her most important treasure. Even under the most intense pressures to meet the obligations of a woman of state, she would not leave her home for official functions until she knew that the needs of her children were met. She has said that “the most successful thing to do in your life, even before your work, is to be successful in your family.”

Through her mother and her beloved Aunt Zouzou, Madame Sadat had come to believe that women had the genuine ability to contribute to their communities not only through the children whom they raised but also through their involvement, when possible, in the larger society. One of her early acts was to find a way that the women of her hometown could contribute to the incomes of their very poor families without causing undue hardship on their children. She organized the Women’s Cooperative in the village of Talla. At first there were only twenty-five sewing machines in the little cooperative that produced handicrafts and clothing. Today there are more than a thousand machines that offer opportunity to women of the village to involve themselves in this effort. It was Madame Sadat who created the mechanisms for these women to pursue this cottage industry and to distribute their goods.

A second important contribution of Madame Sadat was the so-called Egyptian Civil Rights Act of 1979—popularly known as “Jehan’s laws”—in which the rights of women in Egypt were broadened. The first of its kind in an Arab country, this set of laws stands as a model for establishing essential rights for women. Naturally, Madame Sadat has faced a lot of resistance. And there are those who would still like to rescind the Act. But her courage under fire has stood the tests of time and has brought opportunities to unnumbered women in Egyptian society.

She and her husband will perhaps be best remembered for the daring peace initiative with Israel in 1977. When her husband disclosed to her his intentions to seek peace with Israel, she sensed that she would lose him. Her premonition proved to be true. But peace for Egyptians and for the entire Middle East seemed a far loftier goal than personal safety. The extended hands between Egypt and Israel, which culminated in the Camp David Peace Accord of 1979, have led others in the region to seek peace rather than war in the two decades since.

Even after her husband was felled by the bullets of assassins in October 1981, Madame Sadat has continued to pursue a legacy of peace for her children, her grandchildren, and her people. She has worked tirelessly to influence both the direction of diplomacy and the institutions that promote the kind of mutual understanding that leads to peace.

But her enduring work has flowered not just in an international garden. Much of her effort has focused on her Egyptian people. Of course she remains active on behalf of the Women's Cooperative in her hometown. In addition, she helped to found a city that is completely dedicated to the assistance of disabled veterans of military campaigns. She was one of the first persons to reach the dead and wounded in the neighborhood of the Suez Canal following the war with Israel in June 1967. From that moment on she has worked tirelessly to develop private resources that would support the effort to offer disabled veterans a chance to pursue a normal, quality life. The result was the founding of the city called Wafa wa Amal, which means "faith and hope." For her work in this area, she received the distinguished Commissioner's Award from the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in 1975.

It is not just adults who have benefited from her efforts. Egyptian children—specifically orphans—have been blessed by her watchfulness over their serious needs. She has poured her energies and prestige into establishing the SOS Children's Villages in Egypt. She founded the first one in Cairo and has followed that with Children's Villages in other large cities.

Madame Sadat is the supreme proof of what one person can do to make a difference in the lives of others. Since her childhood she has carried a sense of the worth of others, even if they are very different. Rather than withdrawing from public involvement following the untimely death of her husband, she has continued to pursue steadily the welfare of others who of themselves are not in a position to help themselves. In addition to enjoying her grandchildren, she has judiciously used her international connections and reputation to assist those far less fortunate than she. Believing that God has offered her the opportunity to serve others, she has sought to live her life both in accord with her deep faith in Him and in harmony with the memories of her beloved husband. She walks forward with dignity and with no regrets. By reaching out to help others she has in effect lifted all of those around her.

For the value that Madame Sadat has placed on education for herself and for others, for her tireless efforts to promote human understanding and peace, and for her work among the poor, disabled, and orphaned, Brigham Young University is pleased to confer upon Madame Jehan Sadat the degree of Doctor of Public Service, honoris causa.

Madeleine L'Engle

Madeleine L'Engle has received more than twenty-five major literary awards for her work, but in spite of all of the accolades that have now accrued, Madeleine L'Engle's most honored early book, A Wrinkle in Time, was rejected by twenty-six different publishers in a two-year period. Editors apparently could not quite figure out how to characterize the book. Was it for children? The language seemed too difficult. Was it fantasy? The science concepts were too accurate. Was it science fiction? It was diffused through and through with theology. Unable to characterize the book but loving it anyway, the editors at Farrar, Straus and Giroux published it in 1962. In 1963 it won its first award, the Newbery Medal for the most distinguished contribution to American literature for children published that year.

Madeleine L'Engle's own history is much like the history of this famous book. She came out of a most creative environment—her parents being Charles Wadsworth Camp (a journalist and author) and Madeleine Barnett Camp (a talented pianist)—but Madeleine, the daughter, was “rejected” by many of her peers. Being an only child with older parents, Madeleine made her social isolation less noticeable by peopling it with friends of fantasy. By the age of five she had already started writing stories. By the age of eight she was keeping a journal faithfully. Disparaged by companions at the boarding schools where she was placed when her father became ill, and considered by the teachers to be “dumb,” she wrapped herself in mental solitude, shutting out the outside world to concentrate on the stories and poems she was composing in her head. However, once she was grown, Madeleine began to have some degree of success. She graduated with honors from Smith College in 1941 and was active in theater for a while thereafter—as an actress on Broadway and with several touring companies and as a writer, having two plays produced and six books published in that early period before A Wrinkle in Time.

Madeleine L'Engle, the budding actress, married actor Hugh Franklin (for many years Dr. Tyler in All My Children) in 1946 and postponed focusing on her writing career in order to raise their family. Voicing the feelings faced by many who make similar choices, she writes of the sense of conflict she felt between her love for her family and her love for her career of writing, of the impossibility of having both be “first” in her life. She and Hugh had three children: a daughter and son of their own and an adopted orphaned daughter of a friend. Madeleine chose to focus on the children, writing less until they were in school. The importance of family and family values would then become a significant facet of her work when she finally began to write more again.

But trying to get her “writing feet” under her and get things published after not being so heavily engaged in writing was not easy. At the age of forty, faced with a long series of rejections, she decided to renounce writing completely—a renunciation that lasted only a few moments. In A Circle of Quiet, one of her autobiographical books, she writes of this incident: “I had to write. I had no choice in the matter. It was not up to me to say I would stop, because I could not. It didn’t matter how small or inadequate my talent. If I never had another book published, and it was very clear to me that this was a real possibility, I still had to go on writing.”

With this feeling of inner drive, she was able to move on. In 1960 she published the first book of the Austin Family Series, Meet the Austins. In 1962 A Wrinkle in Time was finally published. And, as they say, the rest is history.

Although Madeleine L’Engle’s writing is not easily characterized as fitting a certain genre, it and she herself can be characterized as fitting easily into the patterns that characterize a Brigham Young University education. To begin with, the books she writes are intellectually enlarging. Although A Wrinkle in Time is classified as juvenile fiction, for example, its vocabulary challenges even many well-read adults. And it is not just its English content that is challenging. One of the book’s characters continually produces proverbs appropriate to the situations the book is portraying. The proverbs are given in the original languages—at least six different ones—of the different cultures from which they come. This gifted author also supplies, through her characters, the translations of the proverbs, so all can get the messages. Furthermore, on the intellectual side the book teaches good, solid science. The whole idea of this book, the “wrinkle in time,” is based on Einstein’s theory of relativity as well as Planck’s quantum theory. In other books, L’Engle explores issues of environmental and biological science, each time presenting complex issues in terms accessible for even the most uninitiated in the sciences. It is obvious that the author of these books is well read.

Madeleine L’Engle’s books are also clearly about the development of character. Again and again her characters must make decisions that require the shouldering of responsibility, the recognition and acknowledgment of the consequences of their own actions, and the putting aside of personal comfort or gain for the good of others. Nonetheless, the characters in L’Engle’s books are not paragons of virtue. Each suffers from multiple weaknesses, which make the path to correct choices harder to see. L’Engle’s portrayals make it clear that what might be a flaw or weakness under one condition can easily become a strength when used under other circumstances. One of the overarching results of seeing such portrayals is a sense of hope for the reader.

This hope, along with other characteristics, also helps to make L’Engle’s books spiritually strengthening. The Time Fantasy series, which includes A Wrinkle in Time as the first book, represents repeatedly the idea that love is the strongest and essentially only effective power against the powers of evil and darkness; it is the only power that evil and the darkness do not possess. The circumstances of the books present the characters with temptations to pride, self-doubt, personal gain, etc.—all human traits that must be overcome by the characters’ caring more about someone else than themselves.

Furthermore, Madeleine L’Engle always represents the moving powers of the universe as being spiritual. Entire passages of scriptures, although not cited as if they were scriptures, are quoted and used as touchstones by characters as they face the difficulties of their lives. Such a spiritual touchstone obviously grows out of Madeleine’s own devotion to the religious. Luci Shaw, a friend and coauthor, writes of Madeleine: “She loves God with passion and discipline” and tells of her habit of morning and evening prayer and daily scripture reading. Ms. Shaw also points out that Madeleine knows the Bible not just as history but “viscerally.” Likewise, Luci Shaw says that Madeleine “knows the truth of God’s loving forgiveness,” even when one may have had moments of being “mad at God.”

And possibly one of the most spiritual things that Madeleine L’Engle brings to her readers is her own sense about her writing. One of her biographers, Carole Chase, tells of Madeleine discovering that “for her, writing was not a career, but a vocation—a sacred calling.”

For responding to that calling, for capturing truth and faith with fidelity and setting them in creative and compelling fiction, for valuing families and homes and depicting the warmth and healing power that can exist there, and for always remembering the great worth of even flawed human beings in their ability to hold back darkness and evil through responsibility and love, Brigham Young University is pleased to confer upon Madeleine L’Engle the degree of Doctor of Humane Letters, honoris causa.

PRESIDENTIAL CITATION

Leonidas Ralph Mecham

Leonidas Ralph Mecham is a lawyer, one of the country's best lawyers. His record of achievement is remarkable and might be the subject of study for any young lawyer who aspires to a career in legal administration. He is a Washington insider, in the best sense of the word, for whom political tales still make the best nighttime reading. A good friend of Brother Mecham, Lloyd D. George, a Federal District Court judge in Las Vegas, has remarked that "Ralph Mecham has done more for the effective and efficient administration of justice in the United States federal courts than any living person."

Brother Mecham's life instructs us that the road to success is not without its detours, luck, and assistance from mentors along the way. Perhaps the first such boost he got was at the University of Utah, when one of his professors, G. Homer Durham, a distinguished professor of political science who knew him well and recognized his great potential, recommended him to United States Senator Wallace Bennett as his legislative assistant. He was hired only after a searching interview by Senator Bennett and Robert Barker, a partner of Ernest L. Wilkinson in a small Washington, D.C., law firm. Brother Mecham took the job, anticipating Yogi Berra's famous line paraphrasing Robert Frost, "When you come to a fork in the road, take it." His decision, of course, made all the difference. He was later Senator Bennett's administrative assistant, and, after earning his law degree from George Washington University Law School in 1957, Senator Bennett's legal counsel.

After thirteen years in Washington, Brother Mecham returned to Utah to serve as a vice president of the University of Utah. He also served as dean of the College of Continuing Education, taught constitutional law, and also found time to create the University of Utah Research Park, one of the first such parks connected with a university.

Later he returned to Washington, where he served as special assistant to the secretary of commerce for regional economic coordination, as well as cochairman of the Four Corners Regional Economic Development Commission—a presidential appointment that required Senate confirmation. After his commission work, Mr. Mecham became vice president in charge of federal government regulations for the Anaconda Company until it was acquired by the Atlantic Richfield Company. He then served as Washington representative for the Atlantic Richfield Company until he accepted the administrative office directorship in 1985.

We must avoid, however, losing the man in this recital of his very significant accomplishments. His life is evidence (exhibit A, as lawyers might say) that hard work and commitment pay off. He earned his bachelor's degree at the University of Utah in 1951, completing his undergraduate work in three years instead of the usual four. He worked during this time as the night manager at the University of Utah Student Union and also as a teaching assistant to Professor G. Homer Durham.

Even the pursuit of a law degree was anything but easy. A day program in law school is hard enough, but an evening program is even more difficult. After long days in the halls of the Senate Office Building, Brother Mecham would make his way to law school—first at Georgetown University Law School and later at George Washington—for three hours of intensive course work each night. He earned his LLB in 1957 at George Washington School of Law. Somehow, this wasn't enough for this remarkably gifted and visionary man. He was awarded a Congressional Fellowship in 1963 to Harvard and a graduate fellowship by Harvard in 1965, earning a master's degree in public administration there. He was elected a fellow of the National Academy of Public Administrators in 1991, an honor bestowed on very few people. Brother Mecham also serves on the board of directors of the Federal Judicial Center. He is an ex officio member of the executive committee of the Judicial Conference of the United States and is a member of the executive committee's Legislative Liaison Group. He is a member of the Judicial Fellows Commission; a member of the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association; and is liaison to the Administrative Conference of the United States.

Through all of this, Brother Mecham has been an entirely devoted husband, father, and Church member. He served a mission in Great Britain immediately after World War II. Later, among other assignments, he served as a stake president in Washington, D.C., and as a regional representative. He has been married to the former Barbara Fulsome, a native of Chile, for forty-nine years. They have five children and fourteen grandchildren.

At nearly seventy, he continues to work at court. He remarks that he is "still having fun." He enjoys reading, when time allows, particularly about politics and politicians. Brother Mecham's personal and professional life reflects the best that is in us. His professional achievements are remarkable; his commitment to the Church from his earliest days has never faltered; his powerful love for his wife and family is evident in everything that he says and does; and the dignity and respect with which he administers the Administrative Office of the Federal Court System is almost legendary.

In recognition of his extraordinary life in the law and its administration, Brigham Young University is proud to present to Leonidas Ralph Mecham this Presidential Citation and Medallion.

PRESIDENTIAL CITATION

Asael Delbert Palmer

Asael Delbert Palmer has devoted much of his adult life to helping instill within young people in the Americas a lifelong love of learning and a keen sense of service to their God and to their fellow human beings.

Brother Palmer was born in Calgary, Alberta. His father, Asael E. Palmer, was a world-renowned agricultural scientist and prominent leader of the Church in western Canada. Maydell Cazier Palmer, his mother, was a teacher, scholar, devoted homemaker, and stalwart Church leader.

Delbert attended the Utah State Agricultural College during the Great Depression and then was called to serve in the Argentina Mission from 1939 to 1941. After completing his mission, he married Mable Johansen in the Cardston Temple. From this union there have been five children, eighteen grandchildren, and six great grandchildren.

He began a very successful business career in Alberta as an accountant. Later he became a partner in Sturdie Propane, Ltd., a distributor of liquified petroleum gas in western Canada. In 1954 he established his own manufacturing company, A.D. Palmer Products, Ltd.

In 1961 he decided to put aside his business pursuits and accept a calling from the Church to open the new Chilean Mission. In 1978 Delbert and Mable were once again called to Ecuador to assist the genealogical program along the west coast of South America. In 1980 they were asked to preside over the South American Mission Training Center in São Paulo, Brazil, and a year later Delbert was asked to return to Chile as a full-time regional representative. He would later serve as the executive secretary of the South American South Area presidency. In 1992 and 1993 Delbert and Mable were called to serve on the San Diego Temple committee to help prepare the Spanish-speaking Saints for the temple open house and dedication.

His beloved Mable passed away in 1996, and Delbert later had the privilege of marrying Joyce Harris Porter from Alberta.

Brother Palmer has been one of the most ardent and steadfast supporters of Brigham Young University. Exemplifying his belief in lifelong learning, he returned to school in the 1970s and earned both bachelor's and master's degrees from BYU, and all of his children have graduated from BYU and have gone on to do postgraduate work. Delbert's master's thesis was entitled "Establishing the LDS Church in Chile." During his period as a student, he also served as a volunteer in the International Students Office counseling students from around the world. He also worked closely with the Latin American Studies Program.

During the 1980s and 1990s, Brother Palmer played an instrumental role in the establishment of the Canadian Studies Program within the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies. More Canadians enroll at BYU than at any other institution of higher learning in the United States, and BYU's Canadian Studies Program is now widely recognized as among the top ten in the entire nation. This recognition would not have been possible without Delbert's invaluable contributions and service.

In addition, Delbert taught for more than a decade the special American Heritage course for Canadians and any other students interested in Canada. Not only did he refuse any compensation for his teaching and administrative duties, but he and his family decided to offer generous funding to BYU for the creation of the Palmer Distinguished Lecture in Canadian Studies in honor of his parents, Asael and Maydell. Many prominent Canadians have served as Palmer Distinguished Lecturers at BYU, including two former Canadian prime ministers, the Right Honourable Joe Clark and the Right Honourable Kim Campbell.

Delbert Palmer has served young people throughout the Americas, from the Arctic Circle down to Tierra del Fuego. He has also helped students at Brigham Young University receive both the temporal and spiritual teachings necessary so that they can actively participate in building up the kingdom of God on earth and in bringing joy and happiness to the Lord's children.

Delbert has written, "I acknowledge the hand of the Lord and his many blessings in my life. I trust that, in some small way, I have been able to contribute to His earthly kingdom." Without any doubt, Asael Delbert Palmer has followed in the footsteps of his parents and has brought much joy and happiness into the lives of BYU students and thousands of people throughout the Americas.

In acknowledgment for his devotion to learning and for his service to students, to the Church, and to God, Brigham Young University is pleased to present to Asael Delbert Palmer this Presidential Citation and Medallion.

Academic Procession

Order of the Academic Procession

- President, Board of Trustees, and Administrative Officers
- Official Guests
- Faculty
- Candidates for Advanced Degrees
- Class of 1999

Significance of the Academic Costume

The significance of the academic costume is determined especially by the sleeves and hoods.

Doctors wear the round bell sleeve; the gown is faced down the front and barred on the sleeves with black velvet or color indicating the degree; the doctor’s hood is large. The doctor may choose to wear the gold tassel on the cap.

Masters wear the long, closed sleeve, with a slit near the upper part of the arm; the master’s hood is of more moderate size.

Bachelors wear the long or pointed sleeve. The color of the tassel indicates whether the degree is in the field of arts (white), fine arts (brown), music (pink), or science (golden yellow).

Jon Meade Huntsman

To many, Jon Meade Huntsman—founder, chairman, and chief executive officer of Huntsman Corporation—is known as an industrialist, a chemical magnate, a savvy businessman. But to those who know him well, his true legacy is that of humanitarian, philanthropist, and dedicated family man—a man whose personal service and charitable intent permeate not only his life but his business philosophy.

A winner of the 1997 Horatio Alger Award for true-life rags-to-riches stories, Jon Huntsman overcame humble beginnings to found what has become the largest privately owned chemical company in the world, all the while staying true to the philosophy and faith taught him as a child.

Jon Huntsman was born in Blackfoot, Idaho, in 1937, the son of A. Blaine and Kathleen Robison Huntsman. He was the second of three children, all sons. At his parents' knees he learned the value of education, of persistence, and of a positive attitude. His mother taught him, he has said, to never give in to the negative. "It's never the person who stumbles and falls who makes a mistake," he says. "It's the person who stumbles and falls and refuses to get up over and over again."

His father was a schoolteacher who, at the age of forty-two, decided to go back to school to get his doctorate, taking his family of five to Stanford, where they lived in a six-hundred-square-foot converted army Quonset hut. For three years the family struggled, Jon and his older brother, Blaine, Jr., holding down three jobs at a time. There were occasions when money was so scarce that they would go with their mother to the meat market after it had closed to ask if they'd give her something to put in their soup. But they never lost their hope or faith that they would survive those years and go on to better times.

Brother Huntsman became student body president of Palo Alto High School, where he was voted Most Likely to Succeed. However, he says, that "honor" was really a joke—the student body presidents always received that distinction, and through the years had most often been "washouts," in his words. At the time, he was living in student housing while most of his friends were living in mansions. He held down several jobs to help out, including after his father graduated and taught school in California.

One of the jobs he held was at a J.C. Penney store, in the shoe department. Karen Haight, daughter of David B. and Ruby Olson Haight, attended Palo Alto High School with Jon Huntsman and took advantage of his work's proximity to her father's hardware store. Because he worked so much, she knew the best time she could catch him was when he was on the job, so she often went there to try on shoes. On his part, Jon made sure to prolong her "shopping trips" as much as possible by continually bringing out the wrong size or style of shoes, giving them the opportunity to talk and laugh together.

When a senior in high school, Jon was the only student to show up at a recruitment meeting being held on a Saturday by representatives from the Wharton School of Finance at the University of Pennsylvania. As a result, he was awarded a Crown Zellerbach scholarship—though he'd never before heard of Wharton. He joined the ROTC there and received his bachelor's degree in 1959. Days after graduation he married Karen in the Los Angeles Temple of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Within a month he had to report for a two-year stint in the navy, beginning as an ensign on the USS Calvert and eventually serving as a gunnery officer. Following his service in the military,

Brother Huntsman took his first full-time job, working for Olson Farms, Inc., a major egg producer in Los Angeles. Within five years he was made the executive vice president of the company, along the way receiving his MBA from the University of Southern California.

One of the problems egg producers faced at that time was the cartons in which eggs were shipped and sold. The traditional paper-pulp kind were not sturdy and reliable enough, often causing eggs to break and leak. Jon looked into polystyrene, an oil derivative that is now common in packaging, to develop a soft, liquid-resistant foam-plastic container. That work led to a merger between the packaging divisions of Olson and Dow Chemical, and a new company, Dolco Packaging, was formed. Two years later Jon Huntsman was named president, taking over the then-stagnant business and cleaning house, making sweeping personnel changes in an attempt to bring about a positive attitude for success. He hired what he termed a cadre of "bright young men and women who didn't know it couldn't be done," and within three years the young company had garnered 30 percent of the egg-carton market.

He left Dolco in 1970, three years after becoming president. With his brother Blaine and a group of investors, he founded Huntsman Container Corporation before being invited to Washington to serve as associate administrator in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in the Nixon administration. Six months later he became a special assistant to the president and White House staff secretary.

After two years in Washington he returned to business, taking over Huntsman Container and guiding it back from the brink of ruin. The company delved deeply into polystyrene research and studied markets until they came up with an innovation that not only saved the company but changed the face of packaging forever: he convinced the at-first hesitant McDonald's Corporation to use the Huntsman polystyrene for "clamshell" packaging for their Big Macs.

From that point on Brother Huntsman never looked back, and he has brought his company into a leadership position in the petrochemicals and packaging industries through founding and acquiring a series of businesses the world over. The operations expanded from manufacturing the containers made from petrochemicals to actually manufacturing the petrochemicals themselves. His vision of the future of the industry led the corporation to an aggressive acquisition plan, salvaging faltering companies and constructing the largest privately owned chemical company in the world.

Huntsman Corporation remains a privately owned corporation to allow it to act upon Jon Huntsman's personal commitments to customer service, employees' ("associates'") rights, and, notably, environmental responsibility. Less than one percent of the polystyrene produced by Huntsman plants is sold to accounts for disposable plastic products, and the company has invested heavily in efforts to enhance recycling and promote environmental initiatives.

Community and humanitarian aid are other core beliefs of Jon Huntsman that are reflected in both his personal life and his corporation's work. Philanthropy, he has often said, is the motivation for the aggressive development of the firm. "The driving force behind our growth and expansion in our businesses," he says, "has been for many years now to gain the opportunity to expand our charitable and humanitarian giving."

Brother Huntsman and his wife, and Huntsman Corporation, have been exceptionally generous contributors to a variety of charitable causes, including education, the arts, hospitals, the environment, and humanitarian aid. In addition to his much-lauded gift of $100 million to establish the Huntsman Cancer Institute at the University of Utah, he has been a major contributor to relief efforts in Thailand in the aftermath of a flood and in Armenia to help those left homeless following their devastating earthquake in 1988. He was invited to the Vatican for an audience with Pope John Paul II in recognition of his generosity to the Catholic Church's St. Vincent de Paul relief operations (feeding the destitute around the world) and for his role as cochairman and donor to the restoration of Salt Lake City's Cathedral of the Madeleine.

His service to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has consisted of various ward and stake callings, including bishop's counselor, branch president, and stake president; president of the Washington, D.C., Mission from 1980-1983; and regional representative in the Kearns, Utah, area. Elder Huntsman currently serves as an area authority for the Utah North Area. He and his wife, Karen, have nine children (who remain actively involved in the operations and decision making of Huntsman Corporation) and forty grandchildren.

In recognition of his years of service, leadership, and selfless generosity, Brigham Young University is pleased to confer upon Jon Meade Huntsman the degree of Doctor of Christian Service, honoris causa.

PRESIDENTIAL CITATION

Robert Cedric Bowden

Even as a child and teenager, Robert Cedric Bowden demonstrated exceptional musical talent, leadership, and vision. His musical training began with piano studies with the best teachers in Salt Lake City. Although this opportunity was cut short when his family moved to Rock Springs, Wyoming, young Robert was undaunted. Taking up saxophone and clarinet, he started a professional dance band while still in high school. To this day he is recognized in small towns of Wyoming as the leader of that traveling band.

After high school Robert Bowden joined the navy and distinguished himself by becoming a faculty member of the U.S. Navy School of Music in Washington, D.C. During his service there in the mid-1950s, he met and married his beloved Fay. The two have since had nine children.

Leaving the navy, Robert Bowden came to BYU, where he played clarinet in the university band. In order to make ends meet for his growing family, he worked at First Security Bank in Provo and played saxophone in a local dance band. He also worked as the assistant to Dr. Ralph Woodward, who was conducting a chorus on campus at the time. Brother Bowden earned two degrees from BYU, one in music education and the other in composition. Before graduating he received a scholarship and an assistantship to continue graduate study at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

In Boston he earned a second master's degree, and his experiences there kicked off his professional conducting career. Not only was he appointed the conductor of the chamber orchestra, but also the assistant conductor of the symphony.

While in Boston he conducted the Nashua, New Hampshire, Symphony and Chorus for four years; taught at prestigious Mt. Ida Junior College; conducted and played piano in summer stock at the Weston Playhouse in Weston, Vermont; and, most significantly, was honored several times as guest conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra at the invitation of the late Maestro Arthur Fiedler. On at least one occasion he conducted his own composition, The March of Zoe, with the famous orchestra.

Also busy in the Church, Brother Bowden's involvement in Church music included organizing and conducting the New England Mormon Choir.

In the early 1970s he was advised by his stake president, L. Tom Perry, to come back to Salt Lake City and explore earning a doctorate in musical composition at the University of Utah. Expecting to have a year to arrange the move, he was surprised when he was offered an assistantship immediately, and he announced to Fay that they would leave in one week. The move became so hectic in the end that even President Perry helped load the truck, a story that Brother Bowden likes to tell in detail.

Quickly accepted into the musical community in Salt Lake City, he became conductor of the Salt Lake Chamber Orchestra, assistant conductor at Pioneer Playhouse, assistant conductor of the University of Utah Orchestra, and recording director of the Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus.

Three years later he was made an offer he could not refuse. In spite of his many jobs, his large family needed more financial support. The offer was ownership of a motel in Rock Springs, Wyoming. It was a chance to make good money and provide well for his family. Brother Bowden accepted the opportunity and became a businessman, moving away from Salt Lake City and his career in music—except for his work with the Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus, for which he would commute many hours to attend rehearsals and recording sessions. In 1974 he was released as recording director, leaving him little contact with music—only a class he taught at a junior college. His musical connections with the Salt Lake Tabernacle had seemingly ended.

For Robert Bowden this was a time of great trial. His love of music had to be set aside. Finally one evening when his despair was great, he drove out of town, parked his car, and pleaded with the Lord in prayer, asking in essence: "Am I to do nothing more in music? I am willing to do whatever you wish. Just let me know."

The next day a call came from President Spencer W. Kimball, calling Brother Bowden to be the associate conductor of the Tabernacle Choir. Within a year the choir was reorganized, and he was asked to head the Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus with the provision that the group not travel, produce radio or television shows, make recordings, or perform more than two concerts per year.

During the 25 years since, however, he has led the Mormon youth group on concert tour to such venues as the Hollywood Bowl and the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. He has produced recordings for a weekly radio series and nearly a dozen PBS and commercial television specials that have won numerous national and international awards, including a nomination for an Emmy Award and the Church's first Emmy. He has recorded more than 30 CDs and albums and has often performed more than 25 concerts a year throughout the Mountain West.

Robert Bowden has composed and recorded cantatas and pageants, arranged hymns and anthems, produced numerous recordings of classical, religious, patriotic, pop, and children's music. He has demonstrated excellent musical scholarship in his productions honoring Church historical events, such as a CD featuring the Nauvoo Brass Band. He has produced a large number of arrangements for chorus and orchestra, an area of music that has been much neglected.

Brother Bowden has performed for kings, met presidents, and worked with senators and ambassadors. Yet through it all he has always been willing to speak or perform at a sacrament meeting, talk about children's music to Primary or Relief Society leaders, or arrange a rendition of "Popcorn Popping on the Apricot Tree." For this willingness to submit his life to the Lord, for his dedication to the love of music, for his exceptional talent, leadership, and vision, Brigham Young University is pleased to present to Robert Cedric Bowden this Presidential Citation and Medallion.
